Stepbrother + billionaire + party + fighting + sweet romance!

In two short weeks I had already had more than enough of Matt, enough to last me a lifetime.

We were perfect representations for what polar opposites were, in our few and thankfully short encounters I was pretty sure it was abundantly clear that we had nothing in common.

Seeing him with his friends, a world away from the sarcastic and arrogant man I knew had sparked a little doubt in me though and I didn't like doubt.

I sank down lower on the floor with a loud groan; I had really made a fool out of myself.

For the first time since this morning the house was silent and most of me was relieved.

I pulled myself off the floor, shaking off the strange sensations that seemed to form as Matt winked at me.

I didn't like him.

I needed to remember that. Despite what I told myself as I brushed my fingers against my cheek it was warm, I was blushing.

There was something about Matt, something that definitely set me on edge.
