This book may have the information you need to succeed! What are the 10 things you must know about thyroid disease? Number one - thyroid tests are often not complete, the tests that are done, the doctor may come back and say “Hey, I tested you for thyroid, here’s the results, they are normal, and you are okay.” This may not be true. Number two - laboratory tests are often not interpreted correctly. So even if they do more than one simple screening test and most do just one test, which is the simple TSH screening test, they then will say, “Yes, I did three or four or even five tests, and you are okay.” But this may not be true either, as sometimes they just don’t know how to interpret them. Number three - laboratory tests really indicate what’s in your blood, obviously it is a blood test, but this does not really indicate the cellular level of thyroid hormones. Number four - your physical exam findings may be very significant as an indication of thyroid problems. It is not just the lab test that counts. Number five - also symptoms may be a very significant indicator of whether you have thyroid disease – so you have to look at other things as well. Number six - toxic exposures, and I will be going into detail, are significant in evaluating if you have thyroid disease, what may have caused it, and how. Number seven - supplements are very important in supporting your normal thyroid function, so a lot of things can help you beyond just thyroid hormones. Number eight - adrenal evaluation is very important in evaluating your thyroid. Your different organs, they interact and this needs to be addressed. Number nine- food allergy evaluation is essential in evaluating any Autoimmune or Hashimoto’s Thyroid Disease. You’ve got to do this evaluation.
