Often, when a pack of wolves feels threatened by a newcomer, what will happen is that the alpha will challenge the intruding wolf. A bloody battle will ensue. The remaining, non-participant members of the pack will cajole and howl from the sidelines, remaining a comfortable distance away from the sparring pair. Only one of the two wolves will emerge successful. Possibly only one will emerge alive. His eyes wide, and feeling cornered both physically and emotionally between the alpha and his dearest friend, Tiernan Hunter could sense each tiny hair as it stood screaming warnings on his arms and the back of his neck. Weeks of searching, months of fear and panic, days of kissing up and unfathomably painful degradation, they would all be in vain. He had finally found Dani, and had burrowed his way semi-comfortably into the pack of starving children she had decided to call her home out in the wilderness, and now he would be mauled and thrown aside. The snarling alpha's eyes said it all. Tension was strung so tightly about the two men that it seemed chords could be plucked on its quivering strings. Tiernan Hunter was that intruding wolf. He was the omega.
