Few talents have enjoyed such long careers as vaudeville comedian George Burns. During the 1950s, he successfully made the transition from radio to television. At his side was the hilarious half-wit, Gracie Allen. In this Golden TV Classic, Gracie's friend from San Francisco, Mamie Kelly, arrives with her three daughters for the Christmas holiday. The girls get into everything including the red alligator shoes Harry Norton bought for Blanche. Between scenes, George puffs on cigars while performing his monologue. Special features: Gracie recounts seeing George for the first time, and the original commercials that are written as part of the dialogue.
