Dust jacket notes: "Jimmy Creech was old and tired, yet within him burned youthful anger and resentment toward those who were making a gigantic commercial enterprise of harness racing. He wanted his sport left the way it was, the way he had known and lived it at countless fairs for almost fifty years. He hated the modern raceways mushrooming in large cities, where the horses were raced at night under the lights. He fought this new development the only he knew how. He bred his finest mare to the Black Stallion. And when the colt came, Jimmy placed upon its back all his hopes and plans for the redemption of his sport. Seeking hands to guide and race his colt, he turned to youth again, and Tom Messenger took his seat in the sulky...."
