Excerpt from The Roll of Arms: Of the Princes, Barons, and Knights Who Attended King Edward I, to the Siege of Caerlaverock, in 1300

The Castle of Caerlaverock was situated on the northern shore of the Solway Frith, at the confluence of the rivers Nith and Locher, about nine miles south of Dumfries. It was from an early period the feat of the Maxwells, but very little is known of its history, for it was a place of no great importance. When King Edward I. invaded Scotland in the year 1300, as he crossed the border by this route, he found this Castle of Caerlaverock in his way, fortified against him, and he thought it necessary to lay siege to it. The date of this siege is fixed to within a few days by the evidence of contemporary records. By the writs, tested on the 29th of December, 1299, those who owed military service to the Crown were summoned to attend at Carlisle on the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist next ensuing (the 24th of June), and the English army quitted Carlisle about the 1st of July. For the reasons stated by Sir Harris Nicolas, there can be little doubt that the siege began on the 11th or nth of that month; and, as the record printed in the present volume informs us, it was not of long duration, for it surrendered on the second day.
